

occupant of the building housing Boetigheimer's office is of interest. Gallop said that at about 9:30 that morning he had walked his Schnauzer along the edge of the parking lot. He believed that if the body had been there at that time, the dog, who was on a 20-foot leash, would have smelled it and gone over to investigate, thereby leading to its discovery. Thus, there was some evidence that the body was placed near the building after 9:30 a.m.

The murder of Mark Stebbins was the first of four interrelated crimes against children in the Woodward Corridor; more than 10 months would pass before another would be reported.

B. Jill Robinson

Late in the afternoon of December 22, 1976, 12-year-old Jill Robinson had an argument with her mother, Karol Robinson, with whom she lived in Royal Oak, Michigan. Their dispute involved some household chores Jill had failed to do, and at its climax, Jill's mother told her to get out until she could become part of the family. Jill went to her bedroom, packed some clothes and a blue and green plaid blanket into her denim backpack and, dressed in blue jeans, shirt, snow boots, bright orange winter jacket, and blue knit cap with a yellow design in its border, walked out the door. She hadn't returned by early evening as her mother expected her to do, and at 11:30 p.m. that night, Jill's father, who is divorced from her mother and living in Birmingham, Michigan, reported her missing. She was not seen alive again. Her body was found about 8:45 a.m. on December 26, alongside Route I-75 just north of Sixteen Mile Road in Troy, Michigan; her killer had laid her down on her back on the snowy shoulder of the road and blown the top of her head off with a 12-gauge shotgun. She was wearing her backpack, which still contained the plaid blanket.

The autopsy report on Jill Robinson was prepared by Dr. Robert F. Sillery, chief pathologist for the Oakland County Medical Examiner's Office; it said she had died from shock and hemorrhage due to a shotgun wound of the head. There were no signs of sexual molestation or penetration, and her hymen was intact; a lightly stained tampon was in her vagina (it had come from a box which she had purchased herself and which her mother later discovered).

Despite the many reports that were telephoned to police of seeing a girl Jill's age in cars or along I-75, no valid leads were developed, and there is little or no real information regarding her disappearance, whereabouts for four days, or who her murderer might be. The police know what kind of shotgun shell was used and what size shot; it is a common variety, easily obtainable in a number of local gun and hardware stores. One unexplained aspect of the case: Jill's bike was found by a neighborhood boy on the afternoon of December 27 behind the Valenti and Lieberman offices on N. Main Street in Royal Oak; no one knows whether she rode it there on the 22nd when she disappeared or whether it was placed there later.

C. Kristine Mihelich

Just one week after Jill Robinson was found in the snow along a busy highway, Mrs. Deborah Ascroft called the Berkley, Michigan, Police Department at 6:00 p.m. on January 2, 1977, to report that her 10-year-old daughter, Kristine Mihelich (usually called Kris) had gone to the 7-11 Store at Twelve Mile Road and Oakshire at 3:00 p.m. that afternoon and had not returned. The clerk at that store remembered selling a teenage movie magazine to a young girl about 3:00 p.m.; she was able to tentatively identify the girl as Kris after being shown a photograph. By noon the next day, every police department in the area had a copy of that photo, and Detroit-area radio and TV stations were broadcasting information about the missing girl. Again, despite many telephone calls purporting to give clues or tips--including several calls from a 14-year-old girl pretending to be Kris--nothing of a useful nature was received by the police.

On the 19th day after her disappearance, Kris Mihelich was found. A U.S. Postal Service mailman, Jerome Wozny of Walled Lake, Michigan was delivering mail on Bruce Lane, a dead-end street west of Telegraph Road in Franklin Village, Michigan, when he spotted something in the snow-filled ditch alongside the road; the time was about 11:45 a.m. Something of a scavenger of items he noticed it as he drove along in his mail truck. Wozny stopped, backed up, got out, and walked over to a "blue something" in the snow. When he saw an arm and a hand as he got closer, he realized he had found a body. Getting back in his truck, he drove immediately to the Franklin Village Police Department to report his finding.

Dr. Sillerly's autopsy report and subsequent comments were interesting if not enlightening. The cause of death was asphyxia caused by smothering. Also, the body was not frozen through; it had been exposed in the snow for less than 24 hours, in all probability. There was no gross evidence of sexual molestation or penetration in either vagina or anus, yet Dr. Sillerly told a startled group of state crime lab technicians he had found sperm in both vagina and rectum. He could not account for how they had gotten there, despite some unique theories about the forcefulness of ejaculation. The fact that another pathologist and two State Police laboratory technicians were subsequently unable to detect sperm in the tissue slides he prepared perhaps explains things adequately--there were no sperm, and Kristine, like Jill, had not been violated.

Dr. Sillerly also expressed the view that Kris had dressed herself; her clothes were neat and clean, including her underwear, although she had been away from home 19 days. Deborah Ascroft, Kris' mother, commented that two things made her think Kris had been dressed by someone else, probably after she was killed; her blouse was tied in front, not in back as she normally tied it, and her pants were tucked into her boots, a thing she never did.

During the nearly three weeks between the day Kris disappeared from somewhere along her presumed route between the 7-11 Store and the bowling alley where her mother tended bar, the task force concept of looking for the kidnapper first took shape. Lt. Jerry Simmons of the Southfield Police Department set up a meeting for all police departments with an interest in the recent Robinson homicide and the Mihelich disappearance. The officers present discussed the use of a computer for handling the information being accumulated by the departments in question, in order to avoid duplication of investigative effort, since the same names were coming in more than once or twice. They also talked about setting up a group of officers consisting of one or two from each department involved in the disappearances of the children; the group could be called on to assist as new information to be investigated came in or they would be available as a knowledgeable group if they were needed. The Oakland County Task Force had its beginnings at this meeting.

D. Timothy King

Police departments in Oakland County were still looking for the killer of Kris Mihelich when, on March 16, 1977, another child disappeared. Timothy King, a slim, attractive 11-year-old boy who lived at 1509 Yorkshire Street in Birmingham, Michigan, was last seen by a member of his family at about 7:40 p.m., when his older sister, Catherine, gave him 30 cents to buy candy at a nearby store. Catherine was going into Detroit that evening to see a stage show with some girl friends from her high school; Tim's two older brothers were out of the house, one babysitting for a neighbor's youngster and the other practicing with the cast of a school play; his parents were having dinner at a Birmingham restaurant. As Tim left, he asked Catherine to leave the front door ajar so that he could get back into the house, and when the Kings returned home at 9:00 p.m. they found the door still ajar and Tim missing. After looking for him in the neighborhood and phoning the houses of friends where they thought he might have gone, they called the Birmingham Police Department. By 9:15 the next morning, the embryonic task force working in Southfield knew the King boy was missing, and Birmingham Police Chief Rollin (Jerry) Tobin had asked for full task force involvement in the case. By afternoon on March 17, a new task force headquarters was set up in the Adams Fire House in Birmingham and was hard at work processing the many reports that concerned citizens were phoning in.

Routine investigative procedures established that the salesgirl at the Hunter/Maple drug store where Tim was to have bought his candy did recall seeing Tim King; he had made the purchase. Further, in an important break, a woman witness came forth to report that at about 8:30 p.m. on the night Tim disappeared she had been loading groceries into her car parked on the lot near the drug store. She remembered seeing a small boy in a red jacket with emblems on it (a good description of Tim's red nylon Birmingham Hockey Association jacket) talking to a man standing by a car some two car-lengths from her. She was able to describe the man well enough for a police artist to produce a composite sketch of him; further, she thought his car was dark-blue Gremlin with a white, upswept stripe (called a "hockey stick" stripe) along its side. The sketch of the suspect and a photo of a similar car were sent to all local police departments and were available to all members of the task force, now rapidly growing in size as more local detectives were assigned to the case.

Even as investigative activity accelerated, the report that many detectives had grimly anticipated was received. At 11:15 p.m. on March 22, the Livonia, Michigan, Police Department sent a car in response to a call from three witnesses who had discovered a body lying in a ditch on the west side of Gill Street, a tenth of a mile south of Eight Mile Road. The body was that of a boy approximately 10 years old, wearing a red nylon jacket with a BHA crest, denim shirt, green trousers, and white tennis shoes with blue and red stripes. Tim King had been found. Ten feet away from his body was the orange skateboard that he took with him to the store.

On the death certificate prepared by Dr. John Smialek and Dr. Werner Spitz of the Wayne County Medical Examiner's Office, the cause of death was listed as "smothered." Dr. Spitz's opinion, when he first examined the boy's body at 2:00 a.m. on March 23 was that Tim had been dead from six to eight hours and had been placed along Gill Road about three hours before he was found. The autopsy report showed that he had eaten a meal of fowl about an hour before he was killed. His wrists carried marks that might have been caused by binding, but his body was very clean, including fingernails and toenails. He had been sexually assaulted, the anal region showing clear signs of some form of abuse.

E. Patterns

In their analysis of the four Oakland County murders, the investigating officers noted certain similarities in the crimes that supported the theory that they were interrelated, that is committed by a single killer or small group of killers:

1. All four victims were alone when abducted; also, they were all taken from business areas, in or near parking lots.

2. Two victims were abducted on a Sunday afternoon, two on a Wednesday evening.
3. Victims were held captive, for periods ranging from 3 to 19 days.
4. Victims appeared to have been well fed while held and not subjected to weather or other exposure.
5. The victims were well cared for during their period of captivity, including caring for their normal biological needs. All the bodies were clean, and Tim King's body was described as clinically clean (his finger and toe nails had been scraped).
6. All four victims were dressed in their own clothing (possibly by someone else) just before or after death.
7. All four bodies were deposited along roadsides where they would be readily found.
8. There was no evidence of sexual molestation of either girl; both boys showed obvious anal dilation.
9. Apparently little if any force was used in the abductions; no commotions were reported in this regard.

On the other hand, there are certain differences that tend to make the interrelationship of the crimes less positive. For example, Jill Robinson was killed along the edge of a highway with a shotgun, a noisy and attention-getting method, while the other three were smothered, probably by holding a hand over their mouths and pinching their nostrils shut. Students of the pathology of sex would probably point to the probable lack of interest in pre-adolescent girls on the part of a homosexual assailant of young boys. And, the killer's timing was inconsistent; the Stebbins boy was murdered in February, 1976; the next victim was seized at the end of December, 1976, followed by one in January and one in March. Also, the victims were kept for varying lengths of time: 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ , 4, 6, and 19 days. There are other contradictory aspects as well; the cleanliness of the victims has been seen by investigators as a largely successful attempt on the part of the killer to destroy possible evidence--scrapings from under fingernails, dirt from clothing, or handprints on skin. These procedures, on the other hand, could have been part of the compulsive cleanliness of a far-from-normal individual. Perspective takes on special significance when making judgments on such details.

OAKLAND COUNTY CHILD KILLER INVESTIGATION

Victim #1, MARK STEBBINS, white male, age 12 years:

On February 15, 1976, at about 1:30 pm, MARK STEBBINS left the American Legion Hall in Ferndale, Michigan to head for his home at _____ to watch a movie on television. His mother spoke with him just before he left the hall. She reported him missing at 11:00 pm that evening.

Four days later on February 19th, at 11:45 am, his body was found in the New Orleans Shopping Mall Parking Lot which is located at 15660 W. Ten Mile Rd. in Southfield, Michigan. The place where the body was found is only several miles north of where he was last seen.

The body was fully dressed with clothes he was wearing when last seen. There were discolorations of the wrists and ankles that might be rope marks. The anal orifice was distended with obvious but superficial lacerations. Death was due to asphyxia caused by smothering. No sperm was found in any of the body openings. No trace of any drugs could be found.

Victim #2, JILL ROBINSON, white female, age 12 years:

In the late afternoon of December 22, 1976, JILL ROBINSON had an argument with her mother. JILL packed some clothes in a backpack and left the house, which is located in the city of Royal Oak, Michigan. Her mother assumed she was going to see her father who lived in Birmingham, Michigan a short distance away.

At 11:30 pm, JILL was reported missing. Her father had not seen her that day, nor did any of her friends. Her mother and father were divorced and in the past when she was upset she would go to her fathers' home.

Her body was found of December 26, 1976 at 8:45 am along Highway I-75 just north of Sixteen Mile Road in Troy, Michigan.

Her killer had laid her down on her back on the snowy should of the road and blown the top of her head off with a 12 gauge shotgun.

The body was dressed in the same clothing she was wearing when she left and she was wearing the back-pack. Death was due to the shotgun blast. There were no signs of sexual molestation or penetration.

Victim #3. KRISTINE MIHELICH, white female, age 10 years:

One week after the body of JILL ROBINSON was found, on January 2, 1977, at 3:00 pm, KRISTINE MIHELICH left her home in Berkley, Michigan, to go to the 7-11 Party Store several blocks from her home. She was reported missing by her mother at 6:00 pm, that same day.

On January 21, 1977, at 11:45 am, her body was found in a snow covered ditch along Bruce Lane in the village of Franklin, Michigan. This is a short dead-end residential street. The body was clothed in the same clothing she was wearing when she left home 19 days earlier. Death was caused by asphyxia by smothering. There were no signs of sexual molestation or penetration. The Blood did show a small amount of carbon monoxide.

Victim #4. TIMOTHY KING, white male, age 11 years:

On March 16, 1977, at 7:40 pm, TIMOTHY KING left home to go to the local drug store. The drug store is located in a shopping mall about 4 blocks from his home in Birmingham, Michigan. He was reported missing at 9:00 pm, that same day.

Several witnesses were found that thought they saw the KING boy talking to a male subject in the drug store parking lot. A composite drawing was made of this subject and the car he was standing by at the time he was observed. The parents made several television appearances asking the abductor to release the child, without results.

On March 22, 1977, at 11:15 pm, the body of TIMOTHY KING was found along side of Gill Road in the city of Livonia, Michigan. He was dressed in the same clothing he was wearing at the time he was last seen. Also found at the scene was the skate board he was playing with at the time he went to the drug store. The cause of death was smothering. His wrists had marks that might have been caused by binding. The anal orifice was distended and showed signs of abuse. No sperm or any other substance was found in the body openings.

PATTERNS:

In their analysis of the four Oakland County Murders, the investigating officers found numerous similarities in all four crimes that supported the theory that all four were inter-related:

- #1. All four victims were alone when abducted and were taken from business areas, in or near parking lots.
- #2. Two victims were abducted on a Sunday afternoon, and two on a Wednesday evening.
- #3. Victims were held captive for periods ranging from three to nineteen days.
- #4. Victims appeared to have been well fed while held captive, and were not subjected to weather or other exposures.
- #5. The victims were well cared for during their period of captivity, including caring for their normal biological needs. All victims were clean.
- #6. All four victims were dressed in their own clothing, (possibly by someone else), just before or after death.

Detective Williams advised the following information: (SYNOPSIS)

1. Williams advised that he received a call from Kathy King, (sister of Timothy King, (deceased), advising she had information regarding the Child Killing Investigation. Kathy King is currently an attorney practicing in the state of Illinois.
2. Detective Williams related that a number of months ago, Kathy King had received a call from a friend of their family, [redacted], who is a practicing private polygraph examiner, practicing in the state of California. [redacted] advised that he had a discussion with a fellow private polygraph examiner, named [redacted] from the city of Southfield at a private polygraph examiner conference that was held in Las Vegas last summer. During this conversation, [redacted] disclosed to [redacted] that during the height of the Child Killer investigation in the state of Michigan, he had an opportunity to polygraph a subject, (unknown name as of this writing), regarding a CSC investigation the subject apparently was a suspect in.
3. During the course of the private polygraph pre-test questioning regarding the alleged CSC he was under investigation for, he admitted that he was in fact the Oakland County Child Killer. This statement was allegedly disclosed in front of the examiner [redacted], and the suspects attorney, Jane Burgess who is believed to be deceased.

Michigan Department of State Police
ORIGINAL INCIDENT
REPORT

ORIGINAL DATE Thu, Feb 21, 2008	INCIDENT NO. 021-0001787-08 (DB)
TIME RECEIVED 0907	FILE CLASS 09001

The (unknown), test subject further advised during the pre-test phase regarding the CSC polygraph, that he had taken a State Police Polygraph regarding the Oakland County Child Killing investigation in the 1970's
i. But during the CSC pre-test polygraph, he's admitting to being the Oakland County Child Killer

4. As a result of this alleged confession to [redacted] and his attorney, Jane Burgess, this information could not be brought to the public forum due to laws of confidentiality. Therefore, this alleged confession could not be brought to the attention of Law Enforcement, and has virtually been kept under wraps for the past thirty years.
5. Detective Williams stated that after learning the above information from attorney [redacted] Williams identified the private polygraph examiner as, [redacted] who is still based out of the city of Southfield and is also still practicing as a private polygraph examiner.
6. Detective Williams contacted the Wayne County Prosecutors office, (Rob Moran), and was given an investigative subpoena that would compel examiner [redacted] to disclose the information detective Williams felt he possessed about the Oakland County Child Killer, and hopefully identify the alleged suspect.
7. Detective Williams made contact with [redacted] and interviewed him regarding the information he learned about the alleged confession and circumstances surrounding same. Detective Williams stated that during his questioning of [redacted] when he mention the OCCK information, [redacted] became extremely upset and made several calls to his attorney seeking advice on whether or not he should answer Detective Williams questions as to the identity of this possible suspect who admitted to being the killer. [redacted] upon the advice of his attorney, refused to answer any further questions.
8. Detective Williams then served [redacted] the investigative subpoena, at which time he again refused to answer any further questions or inquiries, until he's had time to consult with his attorneys.
9. Further court proceedings in front of Judge Talbot of the Wayne County Circuit Court were conducted over the legalities involving the privileged communications between the private polygraph examiner, [redacted], and the (unknown), suspect. The alleged suspect is also believed to be deceased
10. Judge Talbot set the matter down for further court proceedings to afford the attorney's time to prepare their case prior to making his decision on whether [redacted] must reveal who this alleged subject in fact is.
11. Detective Williams conferred with Private Polygraph Examiner [redacted] regarding what has since transpired regarding [redacted] and his alleged privileged communication issues. [redacted] stated that he would be more than willing to come to Detroit and testify regarding what [redacted] told him back at the convention several months ago.
